Town issues Festival showcases local youths' talent boil water advisory

Western Review Staff

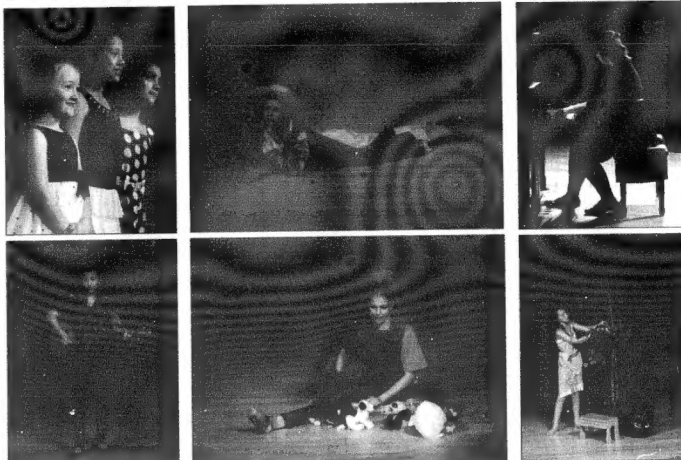

As of press time on May 4 the Town of Drayton Valley remained under a boil water advisory for residents and businesses.

A mandatory water restriction had been lifted on May 2 after several days of asking residents to use water for essential uses only. A water advisory was once again put in place on Sunday morning, followed in the afternoon by the boil water advisory issued by Alberta Health Services. Spring runoff causing high turbidity in the North Saskatchewan River has been impacting the ability of the aging water treatment plant to produce volumes of potable water necessary for normal consumption and required fire suppression levels.

Sunday evening the Town of Drayton Valley had potable water available to residents at PMHS, Park Valley Pool and the Omniplex. Distribution was to continue Monday morning.

Sunday night, schools in both Wild Rose School Division and STAR Catholic Division had been closed for May 5.

For up to date information and answers to questions about the boil water advisory go to www.draytonvalley.ca and visit the Western Review on Facebook for ongoing developments.

On May 1, area youth had the opportunity to dazzle residents with their talent and skill as part of the 24th annual Drayton Valley Kin Club Performing Arts Festival Showcases. The evening included soloists and duets on the piano, as well as singers, guitar players, speech performances, and musical theatre. Search continues for missing Breton area man

news

Family and friends ask for help

According to Taylor, the fact that all of her father's belongings are present leaves her to believe that something much more sinister is going on. That could involve unknown parties taking her father.

There's not evidence of any foul play, but the fact that he's not here to me is very suspicious and that something else is going on, but of course we can't prove it and we can't find any evidence," she shared. "ICMP officers are looking into a couple things that might help us a little bit, but for now that's all we have."

Since searches of surrounding land and the Modeste Creek, which runs through Nicoll's land, began, Taylor says hundreds of people have given their time and energy to help search the difficult terrain that surrounds the area.

Showing great strength while speaking to the media, and while planning further searches, Taylor explained that although her emotions are running high, the support she continues to get has been helping her stay focused, stay strong, and stay hopeful.

"They keep coming and saying I'm doing okay with everything, but the only reason I'm doing okay with everything is because I have so much strength from everyone coming forward and offering that support. That's keeping me going and keeping that hope," she said. "I couldn't ask for more."

One of the people willing to help out has been Jean Reader, a friend of Taylor who used to work for Parkland Fire Services. Reader, who had been out searching for three days when she spoke to the Western Review last week, said that everyone is willing to remain hopeful.

"We're trying to stay positive and hopeful that we'll find something and everyone has been willing to help so it's been really positive that way," she said.

Although Reader said she doesn't know Nicoll, she knows he must be a wonderful man because of the person Taylor is and what he does with his life.

"He has an amazing daughter so I'm sure he's an amazing man," she stated, adding that she couldn't just sit at home while this was going on. "He's a volunteer firefighter here in town, so he's a good person."

"We have everyone from old employers of my dad, old friends of my dad that he hasn't seen for 10 years even, we have the community of Breton, which has been phenomenal, and people have stepped forward like you wouldn't believe," explained Taylor.

"I think that speaks to his character," she said. "He's a well-liked guy and to have people even from overseas asking how they can help—we live in England a long time ago—obviously he's left an impression on people and that speaks volumes for his character."

Another thing that speaks to the character of Nicoll is the character of his daughter and the length she is willing to go to find him and bring him home.

"Keeping my head straight has been a challenge, but my family has always been kind of tough cookies," shared Taylor. "My mom was an emergency nurse, my dad was in the Navy, law enforcement, and fire services, and I think it's a little in our blood to kind of rise up to a challenge a little bit in tough situations. So it's been hard, but I also have a huge support system behind me."

"I won't stop until we find him," she stated. "As far as organized searches, as long as there are resources and people willing to step forward and search areas we'll continue that, but I'm not going to stop until we find him. He will come home."

Nicoll is described as a white male, six feet tall with a slender build and salt and pepper hair, as well as a British accent. Nicoll also has a tattoo of the handwritten word "courage" on his wrist.

Friends and family are asking for help locating Nicoll and urge people who live throughout the area to take the time to search their own properties, especially those who live along Modeste Creek.

Those of what might have happened? First, search organizers ask people to not be searching the perimeter of their property. Followed by the insertion, as well as any old abandoned vehicles or buildings.

Search crews are now working towards gaining permission to enter private lands along Modeste Creek.

Anyone with any information about the disappearance of Nicoll is asked to call RCMP at 780-696-9530 for information about the continued search efforts or how to help find the hatchback page Hugelike Andy. Missing Person or email hugelikeandy@gmail.com. A fund has been started to help the family of Nicoll, for more information e-mail to fivestars4k@gmail.com.

Stay calm and tri it

Well here we go. May 10 is coming and we are ready to go with our pom poms and cowbells in hand.

Drayton Valley is hosting another triathlon for the province on May 10 at Rotary Park where participants flock together and try their stamina in swimming, biking and running. Excitement is brewing as we have our local councillors competing, local participants and visitors from all over Alberta coming to this event.

What is also exciting is that our community gets to watch firsthand and cheer for people who challenge themselves mentally and physically to cross the finish line.

I have never participated in a triathlon. I feel I am best suited in the planning and design of them. However, through observation, I think this has to be one of the most challenging events out there because you must try to master not one, but three different sporting skills. Each activity uses different muscles and requires different mental processing. Out of these three skills, a person will likely be weaker in at least one of them. Having said that, I think a person's mental state is where the real challenge stems from while on course.

From the Ric Desk

There is something to say about triathlon and what it means to the person who decides to take the plunge. It is different for everyone. I heard many local people decide to make the commitment in January to do a triathlon, making it a goal for their personal fitness. Some are doing it because they had a bad personal year and needed something to focus on. Some people do it because they love the challenge it creates as crossing that finish line is almost like conquering all self-doubt they ever had in their life before starting to train for triathlon.

I think about the little ones that will participate at 1 p.m. in Rotary Park as part of the Kids of Steel event, and how cute it is for us to watch them on course. But really, it is much more than cuteness and giggles as they ride their bikes like mad around the park.

I applaud the parents who register their children, and give their kids the chance to challenge themselves on all levels, and the opportunity to feel the support of the community upon their finish.

I strongly believe that participating in triathlon gives all youth, especially those with a lower self-confidence, a chance to grow and discover their full potential.

For most involved with the sport, participating is more important than winning. The triathlon committee has been working diligently on making this event successful. There are set signs and posted volunteers are getting prepared. Temporary road closures are in place to ensure everyone's safety.

I wanted to take this time to thank everyone responsible for making the Drayton Valley Triathlon a success. It has been a passion of mine to establish this event in the community, and thankfully it has been well received from day one. We hope to keep this event in the community for a long, long time.

Around the water cooler...

Hello, and welcome to another thrilling installment of around the water cooler.

This week we start off with some birthday wishes in a very special young woman. Skyelar Smith, 17, wants to send out big love for her 17th birthday and let her know how incredibly blown away she's been by her strength and courage in the face of challenging times. Sounds like if somebody deserves a very happy birthday it's you, Skyelar! We hope you get to enjoy the day surrounded by the family and friends you inspire!

It seems like every event that has ever been imagined is taking place in Drayton Valley over the span of two weekends! Last weekend there were so many things going on we didn't have room for them in this week's edition. So, if you saw reporter Mariana Lulla on an event sampling photos, but don't see those photos in the pages of this week's Western Review, don't despair, just be sure to pick up a copy of next week's edition.

There are far too many events happening this upcoming weekend to list them all, but we want to highlight a few.

The Drayton Valley Triathlon will take to local roads on Saturday morning. Be aware that runner and cyclists will be on in force and there are some temporary road closures. Be sure to obey ALL signage and ALL route marshals on where you can and can not drive. Better yet, why not leave the vehicle at home and walk over to a part of the route to cheer on participants. Route details can be found in this edition or go online to www.draytonvalley.ca/tri-triathlon.

Also on Saturday morning be sure to take the family over to the Drayton Valley Legion for the 10:45 a.m. V.E. Day and Wall of Honour ceremony. This is a chance to show your respect for those who serve their country.

On a final note, we want to send out big Happy Mother's Day wishes to all you mom's and mother figures out there for the wonderful things you do!

That's it, that's all. Have an optimally outstanding week!

County wants to protect investment

Seeks co-ownership of EPAC with Town of Drayton Valley

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

Prior to making a significant financial contribution in the construction of new outbuildings to the Eleanor Pickup Arts Centre (EPAC), Brzeau County Councillors wanted to be sure they were doing it in the best way for their residents.

After much discussion the council proposed a co-ownership agreement with the Town of Drayton Valley that would make Brzeau County a 50 per cent owner of the Eleanor Pickup Arts Centre, the land it sits on and have the County included on the land title. If approved by the Town of Drayton Valley the agreement would include an $800,000 investment in the project.

Brzeau County Reeve Pat Vos said members of council have had EPAC on the agenda since the election.

"There was never any discussion of the value of the facility or the benefit to the residents," said Vos last week.

The discussion around the council table has been how best Brzeau County could be involved in EPAC as it moves forward with its renovations. To date Vos said the municipality has provided approximately $90,000 to the project.

Vos said the co-ownership agreement was discussed by county councillors as a way to "protect the investment of the county residents, because it's significant."

The financial portion of the agreement would put Brzeau County on equal footing for contributions to the project with the Town of Drayton Valley, which purchased the former Centennial theatre and adjacent land solely to use it converted to a performing arts theatre.

The formal proposal was presented to Drayton Valley Council on April 23 meeting. That municipality's councillors instructed administration to work with Brzeau County to develop a co-ownership agreement.

Approved by both councils Vos said the agreement will be a beginning of a new type of relationship between the two municipalities.

While the two have cost-sharing agreements in many areas, Drayton Valley retains ownership and daily operation of the facilities. In some cases Brzeau County's portion of costs for jointly funded items are passed onto the Town of Drayton Valley by way of a grant.

Once the co-ownership agreement is in place the two municipalities and the volunteer committee that runs it, can have further discussions about the project, noted Vos.

TFWP helps fill local job gaps

Federal government moratorium on TFWP in fast food sector garners reaction

Mamta Lalit
Western Review

Suspension of the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP) in the food service industry by the federal government has been making head lines all over Canada with no one knowing what the decision will mean for some immigrants, meanwhile for towns like Drayton Valley it's a wait and watch game.

"I don't know what this could do to our town. Because we've got lots of positions that are called labourers or clerks that are not being filled because people are going to university or because they're looking at jobs in their own field. And so it's difficult," said Mardi Dancy a partner at Select Placements Ltd. "Maybe when you have a big population in the city it could be different and that's where the abuse may be happening. But what happens to us in the rural areas?"

Conservative MP for Yellowhead Rob Merrifield said the foreign worker program keeps issues of labour shortages at bay in these parts.

"We're in a unique situation where we have such a shortage of labour in Yellowhead and in Alberta and Saskatchewan. But of course Canadians have first shot at jobs. Canadians have first preference and the program is supposed to complement labour force," he said.

The decision of a moratorium on the food service sector's access to the Temporary Foreign Worker Program came after the government discovered allegations of abuse in the food industry. The suspension will remain in effect until the completion of an ongoing investigation.

"Canadians must have the first chance at available jobs. We have repeatedly warned employers that the Temporary Foreign Worker Program must only be used as a last and limited resort when Canadians are not available," said Minister of Employment and Social Development, Jason Kenney in a release.

Merrifield said there may be changes coming out of the decision made, that will take weeks, not months.

Dancy said the decision made by the federal government is a terrible one when you think about the rural areas.

"Because in the rural market we do have kids and students who want to work, but they're working for oil companies, for people who work in the field. So we need to fill it with foreign workers and build our tax base. Quite frankly, we don't have enough people to keep our taxes going. And so if foreign workers would fill those positions and we pay them fairly and treat them well, which we should," she said.

Dancy believes there needs to be another way to deal with the abuse in the system.

"I think they're condemning the entire nation for one mistake. You can't condemn it if that business did something they shouldn't have done, deal with it. But to pull it entirely, it will hurt some of the smaller, rural markets. If McDonald's and Tim Hortons don't have staff, they will close it down. Where does everyone spend their money in the morning?"

"Do whatever needs to be done. But don't pull it. There has to be a different solution than just saying 'I'm done.' And there are people out there whose papers could be expiring next month," she said.

Tim Hortons' Public Affairs Senior Manager Olga Petrycki said given that the moratorium is new, the company was still assessing the impact it would have on restaurant owners, last week.

Out of 90,000 Canadian employers that work with the company, less than 5 per cent are Temporary Foreign Workers, who are able to continue working until their permits expire, she said. "We are committed to working with the government to make this vital program better, but believe suspending access to responsible users of the program is not an answer to critical labour shortages faced in some markets."

"In a small number of markets, primarily in Western Canada, there are not enough Canadians to fill all the positions and shifts in our restaurants. The Temporary Foreign Worker Program is used only after our franchisees have exhausted all efforts to hire Canadians, and have proven that to the government. The Temporary Foreign Worker Program has been a crucial tool to allow our local franchisees in some communities to be able to operate their restaurants and keep all of their employees working," said the company in a release.

Although the current moratorium affects the restaurant industry, temporary foreign workers fill voids in other industries as well.

Ryan Pynn is the Assistant Manager at Service Plus Encore hotel on Industrial Road and said some of the positions at that hotel, such as housekeeping, have a high turnover rate and although the company leans towards hiring Canadians first, sometimes it's forced to look at another way.

The number of Canadian employees they had in turnover last year was 35 to 40 employees, he said.

"Alberta is an oil field (province) so most workers go to higher paid jobs. I mean, no one wants to clean toilets and even with high school students they can only work weekends and we need staff Monday to Friday," said Pynn.

Dancy said she is all about giving opportunities to Canadians first and at the same time finds it encouraging to know about future plans made by the government, one of them being express access which let immigrants have Permanent Residency through a faster process as of 2015.

"I don't know how to say it but I think the government has to look and listen to the Canadians out there saying 'What're we going to do?' Our employees need to fill their labour shortage. How do we do it? The labour market option is not the way to go, then what is the way to go?" she said.

Add a little whimsy

Fairy gardens
a little slice of magic
for outside, or in

Brittany Gaudet
Special to the Western Review

People of all ages looking to express their inner child are encouraged to take part in the Fairy Garden Information and demo session hosted by Mary Hutchinson later this month.

It all started in 2010 and has now become a very popular hobby around the world. Fairy gardens come in all types, some are large and buried in the ground while others are small and portable.

"Fairy gardens can be made from anything. I've got two little red wagon centres waiting for me to put into use this year one is going to be a carapool and the other one is going to be a playground. I've used an old wash tub to create the Scottish lake, Loch Wastub. You can use an old tree stump an old planter, just anything that you think a fairy would turn into a home," said Hutchinson.

Hutchinson's hobby got started when a friend of hers gave her a fairy doll.

"I didn't have any trees in my yard to put a fairy doll on. So a friend gave me an old stump to use," said Hutchinson. "I gave her a fairy doll and she got a me stump to build around and that's kind of how this whole thing got started. I started by picking out a piece in my yard that was a little bit boggy and the lawn wasn't growing well and I didn't really want to dig into the ground to make a traditional garden, so I used a raised garden and buried the log that my friend had given me and I went from there."

The sessions will consist of Hutchinson sharing her knowledge on fairy gardens by talking about the do's and don'ts, teaching you how to start your very own fairy garden, as well as presenting a powerpoint and a handout full of information on websites and plants; she will also demonstrate how to make a container fairy garden.

"I'm looking at having 20 people per session that seems to be a manageable number. At first I wanted to make kits for everyone and do a building date with those people but it's very hard to find 20 chairs and 20 benches and 20 little plants. It would also raise the cost considerably. So I decided well, why not share my knowledge," said Hutchinson.

Even with information out on Facebook Hutchinson still isn't getting the kind of reaction from the town that she hoped for. "So far the response has been okay I guess I would like it to be a little bit better that would be awesome," she said. "I've got information on Facebook and I got a few flyers appear in there but it's mostly just word-of-mouth right now. I've even had a couple people asked me if they could do a mommy/daughter day for the information session. I've had a program director for a seniors facility ask me to come and do a demonstration there as well as helping some of the seniors make their own little fairy gardens for their rooms. I'm not really sure if people around town know about fairy gardens. Usually when I tell someone about them or ask stores about accessories or plants, they look at me like I'm a nut. I'm hoping that this whole thing takes off and everybody has their own little slice of wee world."

If you're interested in learning more about fairy gardens or registering for one of the sessions contact Mary Hutchinson at 780-542-4444 or by e-mail at spudsmama@gmail.com. The sessions will be held Wednesday May 28 at 7p.m. Saturday May 31 at 1p.m. and Wednesday June 11 at 7p.m. Tickets are $20 and the sessions will be held at Edokono Learning Commons.

Give mom a bloom of love

Welcome to May — Gardening Month.
It is Mother's Day Month too. This Sunday the 11th to be precise. If you are anything like me, mom is a tough one to buy for. When we were kids it was much easier as there was always lots of stuff that she needed including artwork that she hung on the fridge, dandelions that we picked in the local park, and (in my case) a clay abacus even though she didn't smoke. Back then the thought really was all that mattered.

But, now that you are an adult, there is an expectation that you give this a little more thought relative to what the gift may mean to her. Once again, I am here to expand your mind on a critically important topic.

Mother's Day Flowers

It is no coincidence that the biggest day in the flower industry is Mother's Day. There is a reason for this that every mother understands and most of us (men) do not. Flowers are more powerful than words. Write a nice note or a thoughtful poem, for sure, but don't be mistaken — moms love flowers. Flowers are her 'refresh' button after a long, cold winter. They smell good, their color catches your eye, and just having them brings life to any room.

Mothers understand that flowers don't last forever and they're not impressed by the 'old' flowers that were popular not long ago. And why is that? Because she had you, that's why. You were a product of Mother Nature too. Your mom became a mom because of you.

So what does all of this have to do with your gift to your mom this week? Everything. This explains why she does not want more 'stuff' — she wants you.

Not too many years ago my mom was diagnosed with Alzheimer's. While in the early stages of this dreadful disease my wife gave me a splendid idea to take my mom to a park with a picnic lunch. We did just that. I arrived at her place with a box of food and we travelled to Edwards Gardens where we found a park bench under a tree and we ate. We watched the birds, listened to their songs and repeated some old family stories. The time with her was so sweet that I found myself wondering why I hadn't done it a long time ago.

Alas, I had spent a lot of years looking for the 'right' gift for her when the best gift of all was attached to my nose. Me.

Instead of you I understand that distance and time restraints do not always make one-on-one time with your mom possible. When that happens, remember that nature is here to rescue you from the clutches of your mother's disappointment. A hanging basket or pre-planted patio planter brimming with colour is perfect for the mom with or without a garden. Likely there is somewhere that she can hang or place it.

Check out the new varieties of hanging geraniums instead — they can take the abuse of drying out between watering (indeed, they thrive on it). Or try the new varieties of Calibrachoa, with their small 'petunia like' flowers. Consider iris and flowering verbenas for sunny positions.

Of course you could give your mom a new set of hand pruners, gardening gloves, a bird feeder or bird bath, or a tree or shrub to replace the damaged ones from the December ice storm.

But don't fall into the trap of giving something that is just a 'thing'. At the end of the day there is nothing more enduring and worth remembering than your love, expressed in the gift of you. And flowers.

Online municipal census launches next week

Quick and easy process aims to get accurate population numbers

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

It's time to click on and be counted for residents of Drayton Valley.

The Town of Drayton Valley is undertaking a municipal census starting May 12 and residents are being asked to go online and complete the short census questionnaire.

Designed for those who have called Drayton Valley home for at least 30 days prior to Apr. 30 (a requirement to be considered a permanent resident), the municipality is hoping to get updated population numbers in order to maximize the amount of grant funding it can leverage.

Population is the common denominator through virtually all provincial and federal funding.

— David LeDrew,
Town of Drayton Valley

"It's critically important in how we get funding for projects from the federal and provincial governments," said Director of Information Services David LeDrew.

Many grant funds from higher levels of government are based in part, or wholly, on population. Those grant funds are essential to the Town of Drayton Valley for everything from infrastructure projects like roads, to community services programs such as housing initiatives.

"Population is the common denominator through virtually all provincial and federal funding," continued LeDrew.

Although a federal census was carried out in 2011 the municipality wants to collect updated data specific to population numbers.

To maximize the amount of residents taking part the Town of Drayton Valley will be taking a two-pronged approach to its municipal census. Starting next week residents will be able to go online to answer the three questions that make up the census.

LeDrew said the census is focused solely on population questions and information collected will only be used for the purpose of getting an accurate count of residents to aid in grant funding and planning purposes.

Starting this week residents will be receiving a letter in the mail with instructions on how to access the online census, including a unique PIN number for their household. Once logging onto the site all residents need to do is enter the PIN and answer the questions. It's a process LeDrew said will take only a short visit to complete.

Kiosks will also be set up in municipal facilities, such as the Omniplex, library and town office for people to use.

Traditional enumerators will be dispatched approximately a month later to knock on the doors of homes that didn't go online. The time and cost of the enumerators will depend on how popular the online option was.

"We want everybody to try and use online," said LeDrew last week. The municipality hopes the online census option will help get residents more comfortable with going online to answer questions or providing feedback to the municipality. If the response is positive the Town of Drayton Valley could look at conducting future public engagement online.

The Town of Drayton Valley is hoping this municipal census might also allow it to get a better understanding of the people who spend weeks, and sometimes months, living in the community, but who aren't permanent residents.

"We are hoping to include shadow population in this, which will drastically skew the numbers," said LeDrew. Counting this "shadow population" requires the OK from the provincial government. If Drayton Valley is deemed a municipality where the impact of the shadow population is significant on infrastructure and services, LeDrew anticipates it will get the go-ahead to try and count that aspect of the community as well.

If the province signs off on that aspect of the census he said the town will work with local hotels and businesses to help capture those numbers.

Residents are asked to watch for more information on how to participate in the census in their mailboxes starting this week, ahead of the May 12 online census start date.

Victim Services to host info session on risks of online activities

Evening session aimed at adults with children and young adults in their lives

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

Do you know how the children and teens in your life are sharing information and images online? Do you know how to ask them about it and make sure they don't become the victim or a participant of exploitation or sexual violence online or via social media? Next week, Cardium Region Victim Services and the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton want to arm adults with the resources they need to help the young people in their lives be aware of the pitfalls that come with the prevalence of social media.

In addition to seeking geared to high school students that are taking place in area schools, a presentation designed specifically for adults will be held at the MacKenzie-Cordner Centre on May 13 beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Cardium Region Victim Services Executive Director Jean Williams said the local organization wanted to be proactive in bringing the message not just to teens, but to the adults in their lives as well.

"To create some awareness," she said.

High profile cases such as Amanda Todd and Ranae Parsons demonstrate the horrible consequences that can result from exploitation and sexual violence online and through the social media sites the younger generation is so skilled in.

Next week's presentation will touch on a number of different topics, including the legal aspects and Criminal Code parameters. Information on some of the common activities children and youth are engaging in through technology, myths and facts surrounding online predators and where to go for help and support if someone is the victim of sexual violence online.

Williams said it is important to set sexual violence that is spread electronically apart from the more generic term of cyberstalking.

The presentation, geared specifically for adults, will provide valuable information for anyone who spends time with children and youth, from parents and grandparents to aunts, uncles and family friends. Even if adults don't believe it's something their children could become involved in, the information is valuable. When it comes to online predators, Williams notes they are masters at manipulating their victims.

"It's not that your children are naive," she said. "It's that your children are being manipulated."

The presentation will also give those in attendance a chance to ask questions, take home a resource sheet and offer ideas on how adults can talk to tech savvy children about some of the downsides of sharing too much online.

High school presentations that took place last week received a good response from students, noted Williams. Another will be held this week. Shared with students in a reliable manner by representatives from the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton, Williams said the young people were empathetic to the potential consequences of those who find themselves caught up in sexual violence online.

"They were interested in how to protect people," she said.

Local adults will now have their own to learn. The presentation on May 14 is free of charge and no registration is required. Williams urges people to bring a friend with them and spread the information to others.

For more information find Cardium Region Victim Services on Facebook.

Swim sisters bring home medals

Teenage sisters won gold and bronze at the Canadian Pool Life Saving Championship

Mamta Lulla
Western Review

Two Drayton Valley swimmers, who also happen to be sisters, recently took home gold and bronze at the Canadian Pool Life Saving Championship held in Edmonton.

"It's a life saving sport. It's very different from swimming. They rescue mannequins. Life saving sport is a sport with a humanitarian purpose behind it. They are competitive but it's also saving lives," said Desirée Hansen, founder and coach of the Drayton Valley Life Savers Club, explaining the competition.

Miranda Berry, 16, won gold at line throw and Lindsay Berry, 17, won a bronze at mannequin rescue with fins, two of the 16 categories they took part in.

"It was very hard. I was overwhelmed that I made third. It was a lot of work. I swam almost two days a week in long course and there were times we thought we will die in the pool," said Lindsay. Bern.

The girls competed with life saving swimmers from all over Canada in the championship that was held in Edmonton at the Kinsmen Sports Centre on the weekend of April 26 and April 27.

The sisters will now prepare to go to Rescue 2014 held in France, competing against teams from different parts of the world. "It's the same event but it's taking a step further and gone into a higher calibre. Now they will be competing against teams from Australia, New Zealand, Japan, Germany, and Scotland, that sort of thing, as part of Team Alberta," said Hansen.

The girls represented Drayton Valley Life Savers Club that has about 80 members.

"The first year I had 12 swimmers and now it's been 10 years. I'm over 80. It's pretty awesome to see such a new program see as big as it is. In a town that's very full of hockey, this is very much a hockey town and to have a club this size is pretty cool," she said about her club.

The duo outdid their personal best times explained Hansen. "They have times they go in with. These times were taken at the Provincials a month before, in March. I usually put their personal best times in the last month they've been swimming with me and going into the city and training there. From that time to their final times in the end, they took off 34.06 seconds combined in all the events,"

Drayton Valley Life Savers Club swimmers took home gold and bronze at the Canadian Pool Life Saving Championship held in Edmonton recently.

Seven children from the Pembina Besshikan Karate Club entered the Friendship Tournament that happens every year in Edmonton and won 12 medals. The students won gold, silver and bronze totalling 12 medals out of 14 events they took part in on April 26.

Karate instructor Deb Ellard said the students usually enter every year but these are the best results they've come home with. "This is the first time they've done so well. This is the first time they've taken home so many medals," she said.

The tournament has about 100 participants from all over Alberta and at times Saskatchewan. Children won medals in Kata, which represents set moves, and Kumite, which means fighting.

The tournament was ages of 6 to 17 and the children from the club entered were between 6 and 12. The results are as follows: Daralyn Chandler - gold in

Triathletes set to go this weekend

Mamta Lulla
Western Review

Stay off the roads, or if you're driving give way to athletes this weekend when the Triathlon kicks off on May 10.

The triathlon will see routes around town and into Brazeau County, with a major focus on the Rotary Park and the Valley Park Pool area.

Drayton Valley Recreation Activity Co-ordinator Kerry Doran said they were expecting about 300 entries this year. So far there are 250, out of which 40 per cent of registrations have been from Drayton Valley, while the other 60 per cent have been people out of town.

Doran explained this year the triathlon has a competition going on between the schools of Drayton Valley. The school with most registrations will receive an award for being involved with the growing event.

Doran said the schools that were competing neck to neck last week were Aurora and Evergreen, with more than 20 entries each. "Those two schools have been proactive for a couple years. They've been participating the last couple years and we're excited that schools are picking up the triathlon bug," she said.

It is the first year there will be a competition within schools to find some state, said Doran. There were presentations held at schools to get more students involved.

The race route this year will go north of Range Road 73 and into the Brazeau County.

Road closures will include 48 St. from 50 Ave. to 55 Ave., on 55 Ave. from 48 St. straight through to 43 St., and 50 Ave. to Range Road 73.

Doran said residents and drivers need to be aware of the race, give athletes the right of way and pay attention to marshals.

The event organizers are still looking for volunteers to cheer on the bike route. Members of the public are encouraged to cheer on athletes along the route, or at Rotary Park where they will cross the finish line.

"We're looking to show our visitors the community spirit," she said.

Projects look to pique corporate interest

Lightstream Resources leads the way with significant donations to two local projects

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

Proponents of five local initiatives once again had the opportunity to state their case and receive corporate donations during a community investment plan reception on April 29.

The reception, held at the Mackenzie Conference Centre, was the second for the Community Investment Plan, a joint initiative between the Town of Drayton Valley and Breton County that brings together five community projects in one document to be presented to potential donors.

Representatives from the Breton Pickup Arts Centre, Aquatic Facility and Breton Community Centre projects took the podium to outline the scope of their projects for the invited guests, many of them from industry.

Attendees also spent plenty of time visiting with community proponents and learning more details about their projects and the benefits they will bring to the community when complete.

Among those attendees were Kelly Dressler and Sanford Grove from Secure Energy. The two had not attended the previous Community Investment Plan reception, but were able to gather a lot of information last week. The company, headquartered in Calgary, has previously been involved in other organizations such as the Boys and Girls Clubs, noted the two, but with three facilities in the immediate area, they planned to pass on the information about the Drayton Valley and Breton projects. And it wasn't going to be long before that happened.

"Tomorrow at lunch actually," said Dressler when asked when they would have a chance to pass on what they had learned about the local projects in the Community Investment Plan.

Being able to put faces to projects and make personal contacts with the representatives is a benefit when talking about potential investment in them, noted Grove.

"This way it gives us some ammunition to take back," he said.

Those in attendance will also be able to take back that other companies are already stepping forward to support investment in community programs and facilities.

John Wright, President and CEO for Lightstream Resources made the trip out to the reception to talk about that company's commitment of a total of $500,000 to two projects set out in the Community Investment Plan.

After a Lightstream representative attended the initial reception last fall, members of the Breton Community Centre Committee and Aquatic Facility Committee were invited to Calgary to make a further presentation to the company. What resulted was a commitment of $200,000 to the new Breton Community Centre and $300,000 to the new aquatic facility.

With approximately 100 families working for Lightstream in the area, Wright told the crowd that the company has invested much in its operations in the area and wanted to do the same for the community. Its employees now call home. He called the donations "selfish altruism" for Lightstream.

"We want to have a vibrant community around us to work in," he said.

"We really want to make this a place that our families call home for generations to come."

The company was also impressed by the innovation and leadership it saw in the projects. It is in the projects coming together in the Community Investment Plan. These pushing for the new facilities or programs are the leaders, he noted, Lightstream just followed their example.

"We like to be one of the first followers," he said.

While he acknowledged that the contributions made by Lightstream may not end up being the largest corporate donations secured by the projects in the Community Investment Plan, he hopes it gets the ball rolling.

"I think the purpose of this event was to plant some seeds," he said.

Dry start to spring increases chances of wildfires

A year after wildfires caused evacuations in the hamlets of Lodgepole and Lundale the conditions are once again right for the potential hazard of wildfires.

Lesley Allan
Western Review

As area residents of the area look ahead to the Mother's Day weekend, residents of Lodgepole may be watching the skies a little closer as the weekend marks the anniversary for two wildfires that affected the area in 2012 and 2013.

The blaze in 2013 which caused the evacuation of the Brazeau County hamlet was the worst of the two fires, and although the cause is still under investigation natural causes have been ruled out.

According to Barry Sheilian, wildfire ranger and information officer for Rocky Wildfire Management Area of Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development (ESRD), this is more common than some people would think, especially in the zone where Lodgepole sits, and why ESRD works so hard to promote fire smart programming.

"We're working with Brazeau County and other agencies to foster that social awareness of preventing human caused wildfires," he shares. "Traditionally in all of Alberta, 60 per cent of wildfires are human caused, but in the Rocky Mountain House Wild Fire Management Area which goes all the way to the Pembina River and certainly includes Lodgepole, last year more than 90 per cent of wildfires were human caused, therefore 90 per cent of those wildfires we preventable."

Due to increases in the seriousness and the number of human started wildfires, ESRD has increased efforts to raise awareness of the issue and educate Albertans on fire safety.

"This year fire season, for the second year, started on Mar. 1 due to the Flat Top Complex recommendations [that] came out of Slave Lake. So because of this we were able to do two things, bring on our fire crews and do more preparing and training, and also on the public end of things, provide earlier fire permits to folks, and create awareness by encouraging and promoting them to check their winter burning that has happened."

Fire permits which helps our detection staff to identify smoke and fire on land base, but also the fire permits provide a very important opportunity for an education component where ESRD staff would go and visit those areas and educate on how to have an effective, but safe, burn pile.

Brazeau County also offers fire permits and one on one education regarding burning, but unlike ESRD permits are required all year long. According to Rick Ennis, director of community services with Brazeau County, this requirement has proven to be a huge benefit when drier conditions come in the spring and summer.

Fire permits work awesome because if residents have a burn in the winter and we know where it is, the fire department or the people who give the permits out, can go check to see if it's smoldering or burning underground," he explains. "They are a carry over fire because all they need is a little wind and away it goes."

This fact is why the county, Drayton Valley/Brazeau County Fire Services, and ESRD, work so hard to educate residents on how to be preemptive when it comes to fire. When conditions are as dry as the area is currently experiencing, it does not take much to lose control.

"There's not too much you can do," says Ennis, as to how the county is preparing for the chance of more wildfires. "We're looking at moisture and the dryness of the fuel sources around it, and if it happens it happens and that's all we can do about it."

"We have soil moisture but the trees have still got to green up, the trees are actually still dry, so if anything happened it would go pretty quick," he stresses, hoping that residents and area visitors will be aware of the dangers.

Knowing the possibilities of what could be ahead, Drayton Valley/Brazeau County Fire Services Deputy Fire Chief Murray Galavan says the local fire department has been gearing up for grass and wildfire season for the past two months.

In 2013 the county also saw a second wildfire that took place in the Lundale area, so being prepared to tackle issues such as this is important.

"We're getting our equipment ready and doing some training for grass fires," shares Galavan, noting new members are getting the training for the first time while other firefighters are brushing up on their skills in preparation for grass fire and wildfire season.

Besides being prepared for what may come, ESRD and Brazeau County look to other ways in which they can help lessen the risk of wildfires, and lower their strength should they happen.

"I think it was two years ago we had some revegetation work done [in the Lodgepole area] and now we're just following up because more needs to be done," explains Ennis as to why Brazeau County has applied for Fire Smart grants through the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta (FRIA).

"With this, when the fire comes close it goes down and it won't carry forward into the communities, that's what we're looking at."

According to Sheilian, removing certain kinds of vegetation from forested areas not only benefits communities by slowing down wildfires, but can also benefit the forests that have had work done on them.

"What those actions would do is to reduce the volume of what we call forest fuels, or trees, and that would reduce the intensity of future wildfires in that area," he explains. "But another component is it would provide a healthier forest for the area. By thinning and pruning it, we would allow more sunlight to come in and create younger more rejuvenated and healthier forest stands, and a healthier and younger stand is more fire resistant than an older [one]. So it creates a safer community and creates a healthier forest as well."

According to Sheilian, actions such as these can be done on a much smaller scale in residents' personal gardens and he encourages them to look at what can be done by visiting www.firemartcanada.ca

Make Mother's Day a mom/daughter time

Find something to do together to make the day special for you both

News Canada

Little girls count on their mothers for care and safety, question their mothers throughout their teens, sift out her knowledge as they come of age — and then somehow overnight, it can strike like a bolt of lightning. There it is, as it's always been, our mother's unconditional love from the second we were born. Appreciation may take a while to grow, but when it does, mothers and daughters often become best friends as they laugh, listen, learn, and lean on each other equally. As adults, Mother's Day is one more opportunity to strengthen those ties, to spoil her with surprises, and to give symbols of the unconditional love we feel for her as well.

Canadian lifestyle expert Janette Owen offers these tips for personalized gifts between adult mothers and daughters: Tap a special interest — You may have a few shared pursuits with your mother, but which one is tops for her? Is it music, cooking, perhaps horseback riding? Her favourite pastime can be the basis for a gift, or for a day out together. Indeed, if it's something you also did together when you were younger, now it may have much more meaning. Give her a gift card and go shopping — Select a store that is certain to put a sparkle in her eye and arrange a day to take her there. The allure of a gift card is the fun of finding something fabulous on someone else's dime. Take part in her fitness and health — If you have shared health and wellness goals, buy her new runners and some attractive new work-out clothes. Plan a weekly walk together, a game of tennis, yoga, swimming, or aerobic classes at your gym. Make fitness fun year round by sharing any tips you both find for your body, mind, and soul.

Honour your bond with a keepsake — Start a bracelet that can be filled with special charms for years to come. Celebrating moments is the specialty of leading jewelry brands such as Pandora, and this year their Mother's Day collection (with delicate roses, tiny bows, symbolic hearts and filigree lace) is especially eye-catching as it goes hand-in-hand with the pretty pastel of spring. The collection can be explored at Pandora.net.

Give the gift of photos

News Canada

Instead of sticking photographs at random onto the pages of an album — or forgetting what images you have at the back of your computer — now you can produce a beautiful hard bound book to last for centuries. With both Mother's Day and Father's Day just around the corner, this gift idea could make their eyes pop. The accessibility of certain digital tools today means you don't need to be an expensive publisher to produce a professional-quality book, says Janette Owen, the president and founder of Blurb (a leading online publishing service). "Our website provides templates free of charge for anyone with a laptop publishing skills, and the end result can be stunning." Parents, for example, can see their old photos alive with a glimmer — perhaps a full-sized one of their front cover — and in the resolution of photos can be beautifully revived. Inside, on page after page, it will be a delight for them to see one big slice of their lives recorded into perpetuity, especially since everyone photographed will look like a star. Anyone who picks the book up from your coffee table will think it was purchased from a book store. Begin with a theme like a milestone birthday, a wedding, an anniversary party, or a once-in-a-lifetime vacation trip. A sure bet is a photo book that showcases children, or grandchildren, the family pets, or even your mother's own special recipes. Add captions, anecdotes, paragraphs, or full chapters of their valued recollections. Or, help them write a full memoir, with lots of photos, mementos, and illustrations to create a priceless heirloom in your family for centuries to come. The only expense is the printing and delivery, which is in the range of $40 to $80 per book depending on the paper-quality decisions — and e-books are just a fraction of that cost. If you run into any technical difficulties, the website (blurb.ca) assists with tutorials and tips — and if you would like a professional touch with writing and editing (writer4yourbook.com) or with an experienced book designer (rossignoldesign.com) you can cut your work in half. TO MOM, WITH LOVE

Photo books can be a personal gift that your mom will treasure for years to come

Go green with gifts this year for Mother's Day

This Mother's Day consider gifts or experiences that are eco-friendly

Metro Creative

Mom may appreciate chocolate or flowers. But for children who want to offer her something a little more special — especially for their eco-conscious moms — there are a number of different gift options to make Mom's big day as eco-friendly as it is enjoyable.

An eco-friendly gift for Mom is a gift that keeps on giving. When you jot down your gift idea list, think about adding these "green" gifts.

Make a basket of gardening gear. Garden plants and supplies are perhaps the greenest gifts to give Mom. Plants are so plentiful and varied that there are bound to be ideal flowers or greenery for every mother's tastes. Complete different gardening essentials, such as seeds or seedlings, organic soil mix, mulch, all-natural compost, and a few different planting containers. You can also include gardening gloves and ergonomic tools made of recycled materials. Finish the gift with the inclusion of a book that describes different garden designs and gives tips for beginners.

Dine at a local restaurant. Many families take Mom out for a meal on her special day. To make the experience eco-friendly, select among restaurants that are close to home in the area. Explore the possibilities of restaurants that may serve foods made with local, organic ingredients. If you cannot find such a restaurant, don't worry, just choose a local establishment to conserve fuel.

Pay for a car tune-up. Improving the gas mileage on Mom's car is one gift that can be environmentally friendly. According to the United States Department of Energy, keeping a car in shape can help save money and improve fuel economy. Fixing a serious maintenance problem, such as a faulty oxygen sensor, can improve Mom's gas mileage by as much as 40 percent. Also, be sure to have her car tires properly inflated. She can be losing gas mileage by 0.3 percent for every 1 psi drop in all four tires. Getting an oil change with the recommended grade of motor oil is another gas-mileage improvement measure.

Purchase eco-friendly kitchen items. It may be a major faux pas to give Mom an appliance or a new vacuum for Mother's Day. However, if your mother is an avid cook or baker, she may appreciate some new mixing bowls or utensils made from recycled materials. If Mom is the consummate entertainer, get her new glass tumblers and sipping straws made from recycled glass. They are perfect for serving cocktails and outdoor entertaining.

Pamper Mom with organic products. What mom doesn't enjoy a little pampering from time to time? You can treat your mother to a spa experience at home by assembling a basket full of organic shampoo, conditioner, massage oils, bath salts, and any other organic spa items you can find. Spend the day outdoors. Most moms cherish any gift from their children whether lavish or simple. A nice, eco-friendly gift is to spend time together. Research local parks or hiking trails and plan a day where you both commune with nature. Explore the landscape and be on the lookout for local plants and wildlife. Plan to finish the day with a homemade picnic lunch.

TO MOM, WITH LOVE

Pamper your mom the natural way this year

If you mom is interested in a more natural lifestyle, incorporate that into your Mother's Day this year.

Neen Canada

They carried us in their womb for nine months, they put up with our temper tantrums, our crying and whining, they carried us, listened to us, and they still love us more than anything in the world.

Mother's Day is an opportunity to show this world how truly thankful we are for everything she has done. This Mother's Day, show her you care in pampering her with one of these more original ideas, all of which will make her feel amazing while also keeping her happy and healthy.

Mother's Day celebrated more than Father's Day: Poll

QMI Agency

Canadians appear to be momma boys and girls, with a new survey showing we're more likely to celebrate Mother's Day than Father's Day. According to RetailMeNot.ca, 71 per cent of respondents said they will celebrate Mother's Day, but only 57 per cent are going to do something for dad in June. As well, 26 per cent admitted they will spend more on their mother.

The majority of Canadians polled said they will spend $50 or less on Mother's Day and Father's Day (60 per cent and 53 per cent, respectively), and 17 per cent said if they buy their mother lunch or dinner, they don't also then have to buy her a gift. The top gift for moms is flowers, while all we apparently want to get for dad is a card.

As well, 26 per cent admitted they will spend more on their mother.

organic farms also have onsite restaurants that offer delicious gourmet organic meals. A day trip to the country with mom will make her feel loved and she will be happy that you chose to spend the day with her. Give her the gift of natural health. Studies suggest that, despite maintaining a healthy and balanced diet, older women are particularly prone to nutritional deficiencies. To make up for these shortfalls in their diet, some doctors recommend that older women take supplements such as calcium, vitamin D, probiotics and omega 3s. Visit a local natural health retailer and purchase a gift card for your mother to stock up on some of these essential vitamins and minerals. Helpful and knowledgeable staff can help guide her and answer her questions. To locate the nearest natural health retailer and for more tips, visit the Canadian Health Food Association's (CHFA) website at chfa.ca.

BRETTON HIGH SCHOOL

This month's habit is "Begin with the end in mind." We encourage our students to think about their core values, and to begin to develop a written personal mission statement. A personal mission statement is a summary of your highest values, what you want to do with your life, and the contribution you want to make.

Having a clear mission is the basis for making major life decisions, as well as small daily choices. What is most important to you? What do you want people to say about you on your 30th birthday?

Congratulations to Shelby Garrett, Emilie Polk and Quanna Teneycke who earned silver at the tri-county badminton tournament. Also, spring has arrived! Junior and senior BHSC Cougar Football starts this week!

Hot lunch is available at BHSC on Wednesdays and Fridays for $5. Please pre-order.

At 6:30 p.m. on May 13 at the Mackenzie Conference Centre in Drayton Valley, there is a parent information session being held discussing myths and facts surrounding Internet predators. Topics will touch on Canadian law as it applies to sexual violence and technology. It covers activities online that could be a danger for children, and will give resources for help and support. For more information call Candian Regisium Victim Services at 780-542-7099.

NEWS

Fire Services briefs

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

'TIS THE SEASON
The snow is finally gone and the spring rains have started to saturate the ground yet meaning conditions are right for grass fires.

In fact, grass fires accounted for four of the six calls for service received by the Drayton Valley/Brazeau County Fire Services from Apr. 21 to Apr. 30. Deputy Fire Chief Murray Galavan said one of the reported grass fires was a permitted burn where the person burning was concerned it was getting out of control. Fire crews contained the other three fires quickly before they could become more serious.

Members of the fire services did attend a fire alarm at a rural residence in the county. When they arrived at the location it was determined the alarm was false and the resident couldn't turn the system off.

On Apr. 28 firefighters from Station No. 3 in Drayton Valley responded, along with other emergency services, to a two-vehicle collision at Range Road 64 and Twp. Road 500. The driver of one of the vehicles involved in that collision died from his injuries and the other was airlifted to hospital.

DON'T BE THE FUEL FOR GRASS FIRES
This weekend will mark the anniversary of the first of two wildfires that burned in our last spring. With a number of grass fire calls already this year and conditions favourable for fires the Drayton Valley/Brazeau County Fire Services is reminding people to do their part to prevent wildfires.

Although the area saw a significant amount of snow during the winter, Deputy Fire Chief Murray Galavan said it hasn't led to a wet spring.

"Due to the lack of frost in the ground the moisture went away very quickly," he said. "So the condition is right for grass fires."

Last week the fire services issued a fire advisory for the area. An advisory is put in place when the fire hazard in the area is moderate to high. Wildfires can start from most accidental causes and spread moderately through dry brush and grasses. Wildfires not suppressed immediately can still become very serious fires. Outdoor burning is permitted only with a fire permit or in an approved fire pit or burning appliance.

For those who choose to take part in activities not restricted by the fire advisory, such as backyard fires, in a permitted fire pit or burn barrels, the fire services ask residents to use extra caution. Be sure the fire pit or burn barrel has the appropriate screen over the top as required by bylaw in both municipalities served by the Drayton Valley/Brazeau County Fire Services.

Be sure the area around the fire pit or burn barrel is clear of grass or other easily ignited materials and Galavan suggests surrounding them with a ring of gravel or stone.

Above all, common sense should dictate whether residents light up.

"It's extremely windy maybe you can hold off and burn when it's calmer," said Galavan.

Those who smoke should make sure cigarettes are disposed of properly and lit cigarettes are never thrown on the ground where they could spark a fire.

Adults are asked to keep a close eye on curious children who may attempt to start a fire on their own, not realizing the potential danger.

As a precaution residents should be careful when doing their spring clean up around the yard. Be aware that sparks from equipment such as lawnmowers can start a fire. Be sure your equipment has a proper muffler or spark arrester and that debris such as rocks that could cause a spark when struck by lawn equipment, is cleared away.

Up-to-date information about local fire advisories or fire bans can be found on the Drayton Valley/Brazeau County Firefighters Association website at www.dvfa.ca, the Brazeau County website at www.brazeau.ca, or the Town of Drayton Valley website at www.draytonvalley.ca.

Best things in life are free

➤ Some of the best finds can be ones you stumble on at the side of the road or on a walk in the woods.

Cheryl Gillespie
Special to DMI Agency

Some of the most interesting and exciting pieces in a design project are often free. Yes, free, or practically free as these are pieces that we have restyled, found, reinvented or bought for just a few dollars from thrift stores, estate sales or flea markets.

Yesterday, as I was driving home from a client's, I noted a stack of beautiful birch logs sitting at the end of the driveway. Obviously someone had taken down a birch tree and had cut the trunk into sections. I was looking for just the right pieces. A designer never passes by an opportunity, so I called the owner, saying the birch and the logs would be perfect for a dozen of the branches away so you can use the trunks in arrangements both indoors and outdoors.

We could also make a picture frame from the trunks for a rustic lodge or cabin. The logs would be perfect for a rustic lodge or cabin.

esting when the old fabric is painted with chalkboard paint and then left as is or detailed with an artist's touch.

Think outside the box: Earlier this year, I visited a restyler's nest and drooled over a dining table base repurposed from a 1930s Rolls Royce engine that had been lovingly chromed. Truly this was a stunning piece and ended up selling for Consider repurposing leftover tiles as chargers or serving plates. There is opportunity all around us to create the most interesting and unique pieces for our homes and it doesn't need to cost us our savings.

A designer keeps her eye peeled for interesting shapes and textures and is always thinking of opportunities to rethink and reuse. Combine old with new, and found with purchased. It could be as simple as gluing interesting old keys, beach pebbles or dried florals to a plain set of nanking rings.

This weekend, get out and start hunting at reclaimed stores, thrift shops and garage sales — you just never know what you might find. Now that's fabulous living!
